'DIET DEFICIENCY' CUTS CROP YIELD

Lack of Essential Foods Reduces Productivity.

By HERBERT L. GARRARD

Diagnosing the ailments of "sick" crops and prescribing the restoratives is a science that can turn losses into profits on American farms.

Many of the diseases that destroy the productivity of crops are due to diet deficiency—to a lack of such essential plant foods as nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash in the soil. And just as tell-tale symptoms are present when human beings are ill, so growing plants reveal their infirmities by various signs.

Even in the early stages of growth these signs of ill-health are readily discernible. Sickly seedlings with narrow leaves, thin stalks, poor root formations and tips of leaves tinted a reddish-brown hue tell a story of starvation for necessary plant nourishment.

With oats, for example, a deficiency of potash in the soil will be evident in a reddish coloration of the leaves as early as eight days after sprouting. The foliage of potatoes shows a dark green in the early stages of potash starvation; in the case of tomatoes there is a purplish leaf coloration when the plants are starved for phosphorus.

Corn that is suffering from diet deficiency is easily recognizable. When nitrogen is lacking it develops a streaked, yellow leaf. When potash is missing the edges of the leaves are "fired" or scorched and a spotty yellow streaking spreads over them.

Fortunately, it is possible, even in the growing season, to apply correctives once the ailment has been diagnosed. Tests in corn-belt states have proved that with corn still in the early stages of growth, it is possible to side-dress the plants with fertilizer to correct dietary deficiency. The use of 200 pounds per acre of mixed fertilizer containing potash, in early July on 15 cornfields on a soil high in lime content, in a midwestern state, resulted in an increase of 15.8 bushels per acre compared with fields not treated for potash starvation.

But while plant food deficiencies can sometimes be corrected during the growing season, the sure preventive is to have the soil tested before planting time. County agents or agronomists at the state agricultural colleges are prepared to analyze soil samples and provide farmers with information concerning the fertilizer needs of their soil. The tests will reveal whether there is a lack of nitrogen, phosphoric acid or potash. By following the recommendations thus obtained, farmers can replenish depleted soil resources and be reasonably sure of growing healthy, productive crops.

Farmers Work Together To 'Keep Soil at Home'

After many well-intended attempts to stop the blowing of good top soil from their fields, farmers of Greeley county, Kansas, back in 1937, saw that they would have to get together in the fight to keep their soil at home. If a single farmer tried to hold his soil down by listing a field, the top soil from an unlisted field adjoining would blow over it and cover up his work.

With the help of farm leaders in the county, the farmers organized a countywide campaign to use AAA conservation practices to get all the land in the county listed at the same time, and protected by cover crops and strip-cropping.

The job was hard, but the farmers were for any plan that would break the force of the wind and keep their soil covered. When the job started, each farmer had an average of 3,000 acres of land to list, and they kept at it—literally day and night—until it was finished.

To make the plan thoroughgoing, the county organization adopted a rule that no farmer could get any AAA payment unless he had all his crop land either in cover crops such as Sudan grass or sorghums, or in strip-cropping—a strip of cover to slow down the wind, then a strip of wheat or fallow, and then another strip of cover crops.

Last year, with six times as much land in cover crops and strip-cropping as in 1936, five times as many acres in summer fallow, half as many acres in wheat, and twice as many acres of feed crops for their live stock, these farmers reported that they had the wind hazard under control. If they continue what they have started, they believe that nature will complete the job.

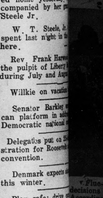
Busy Days for Flue-Cured Farmers



Flue-cured tobacco growers are busy these days—busy making decisions about when and how best to harvest and cure the crop. Those who have studied the problem, farmers have important decision to make July 20 when the referendum on marketing quotas will be held—a decision that may affect the marketing of the crop. Months of hard and expensive labor often go for little within a few minutes of time when the supply of tobacco is out of line with demand.

UNIVERSALLY POPULAR

The "Sunday School Lesson" published each week in this newspaper has been adopted by thousands of church instructors throughout the United States as a regular part of their weekly work.

It is a series and exposition of the international lesson for each week, prepared by Dean Harold L. Lundquist of the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago, a recognized leader in the nation's church work. Dean Lundquist has been active in teaching youthful groups for years, thereby acquiring an insight into the needs of those people for understandable explanations of Bible passages.

In view of his accomplishments in church work, it is not surprising that Dean Lundquist's exposition of the weekly Sunday School lesson is being used in almost every community of the nation. As teacher or student you will find it extremely helpful.

Bent Creek Personals

Bent Creek, July 16.- Farmers through this section have about finished threshing wheat. The yields have not been so good this season. The crops are looking good while we hear a lot of complaints of grass growing too fast.

Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Turner and Mrs. Nannie Turner of Lynchburg spent Sunday with Mrs. Vergie Stephens.

Rev. A. L. Shumate filled his regular appointment at Maple Grove the second Sunday afternoon. After the service the candidates for baptism who professed faith at the meeting that closed the fifth Sunday were baptized in the pool at the Amherst church. There were five additions to the church.

The friends of Mr. Charley Jamerson regret to hear of his illness they hope for him a speedy recovery.

The new store and dwelling that is being erected here by William McCormick of Chester, Pa. is very near completed.

W. W. McCormick, a World War veteran who has been ill is no better.

The home coming day that was celebrated at Maple Grove church on the fifth Sunday in June was considered a success by all present. Dr. R. C. Horning who was instrumental in its organization lives at Coral Gables, Florida but owing to ill health and age was not able to be present. Rev. J. H. Gordon of Virginia, Va. wrote that he was too feeble to attend. The committee having the program in charge was composed of Mrs. W. E. Taylor, Mrs. Maggie Bergman, Mrs. Milton Hunter and Mrs. Tea McCormick. The men of the community assisted wonderfully helping them to clean off the church grounds and making the tables to hold that wonderful dinner and getting the ice for ice water to go with the dinner. Former ministers present were R. D. White of Amelia; B. L. Pettes of Crewe; W. C. Hughes of Keysville and T. E. Goad of Pleasant View. All had messages to deliver and were enjoyed by all present. History of the church was read by A. L. Shumate, pastor of the church who had charge of the program.
